

Hi Hostaway team,

I've spent 8 years designing consumer and partner products at Booking.com, including the B2B tool I'm about to tell you is five years old. I'd rather name that directly than have it surface as a gap you find yourself. Pulse, Booking.com's partner availability calendar, remains my clearest proof of B2B product judgment: sole designer on a 7-month, multi-phase research program across 3,900+ partners in 228 countries, taking partner satisfaction from 65% to 71.1% and holding 75.7% Beta retention. The five years since have been spent on Booking.com's guest-facing funnel: higher-volume, higher-stakes experimentation, consumer-marketplace territory. I think that depth transfers directly to the complexity you're describing. I also think it's fair for you to weigh that against candidates with more recent B2B reps, and I'd rather you weigh it with the facts than without them.

On the AI-fluency requirement: Claude Code is a working part of my design process. I've built and shipped Live Edit, a Chrome extension that lets users adjust copy and spacing on a live page and apply the changes with AI, a job-search triage tool that scrapes and scores listings with an embedded AI query interface, and a digital wardrobe app, alongside using it to structure and pressure-test my own case study writing.

I'd welcome the chance to talk through how this maps to what you need.

Best,

Ignacio Azzi